

Women & Men as Allies : At Work and At Home

PART OF THE SERIES

WOMEN & MEN AS ALLIES

A Partnership between Feminist.com and
The Center for the Study of Men & Masculinities

Supported by the Woodcock Foundation

Women & Men as Allies : At Work and At Home

A conversation about how women and men can be allies in the efforts to balance work and family

DISCUSSION

Let us explore how men and women can work as allies to improve the way we all balance our work and family roles:

- How are millennial expectations shifting the way employers and employees think about the workplace?
- How can we facilitate a shift in gender expectations at home to make it easier for men to fully participate as parents and in other family roles?
- How can we facilitate a shift in gender expectations in the workplace to create more equity for women and also accommodate the needs of all parents?
- How can we shift outdated cultural norms and policy frameworks to support those who are most impacted by a lack of balance between work and family responsibilities?

MODERATORS

Marianne Schnall, Author and Founder/Executive Director, Feminist.com

Michael Kimmel, SUNY Distinguished Professor of Sociology and Gender Studies; Executive Director, Center for the Study of Men and Masculinities

SPEAKERS

Jessica Bennett, Journalist; contributing editor, Lean In

Stacey Faella, Program Manager, Woodcock Foundation

Simon Isaacs, Co-founder of Fatherly

Alicia Jay, Co-founder & Managing Director, Make It Work Campaign

Josh Levs, Journalist and Fatherhood columnist; Author of All In

Special thanks to

Willa Shalit, Christianne Disend, Maiden Nation, RTM Limited and our celebrated speakers.

This is the second in the Women & Men as Allies series, a partnership between Feminist.com and the Center for the Study of Men and Masculinities.